

ABOUT US | CONTACT US | eNEWSLETTER

CHINA US Focus

ENGAGE. STIMULATE. IMPACT.

FOLLOW US

- HOME
- FOREIGN POLICY
- FINANCE & ECONOMY
- ENERGY & ENVIRONMENT
- PEACE & SECURITY
- POLITICAL & SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT
- CULTURE & HISTORY
- LIBRARY

Home Page

Edward Snowden and US-China Relations

Walker Rowe, Publisher at Southern Pacific Review
June 25, 2013

Tags: China, Cyber Espionage, Cyber security, PRISM, Snowden, US

China and the United States have been at odds ever since the Obama administration accused the Chinese government of hacking government and business computers from secret locations inside China. But Edward Snowden, the ex CIA and NSA employee who fled the United States after leaking documents to the Washington Post and Guardian newspapers, revealed in an interview that the United States has been hacking into Chinese government and business computers as well. There is no reason to doubt the veracity of Mr. Snowden's claim, for he had access to the NSA's PRISM program's data and the Obama administration has admitted that what he revealed regarding the PRISM program is accurate.

-  FACEBOOK
-  TWITTER
-  WEIBO
-  GOOGLE+
-  RSS
-  EMAIL
-  PRINT

Latest Articles

- An Interlude in the US-Russia Symphony
- China's Risky Finances
- Obama's Climate Position and his "Grand Strategy"
- China's Anti-Satellite Program: They're Learning
- When Filial Piety Is the Law

